Understanding Families

Children most commonly understand family as people who live with them or the people who take special care of them. Families are how children learn to view themselves and others and find their place in the world. Family is central to the life of every child. These family relationships precede our relationship with children and will influence the way we interact with each child. Family relationships also endure after children leave our care. We must take seriously the crucial relationship we have with families as partners in the care of their children and recognize our responsibility to make time to learn about and connect with families.
